Anthrax

anthrax, we put safety first.

Vaccine supplies at the 437th Medical Group Immunization Clinic are down to two vials, or 20 doses, said Capt. Tracy Middleton, 437th Public Health Flight deputy commander. The vaccines expire Aug. 5 and the clinic is not expecting to receive more once the doses are used.

Middleton urges anyone who knows they are deploying to a high-threat area to visit the clinic and receive the vaccine. Once the supply is gone, members will have to continue the shot series at their deployed location.

"We determined that vaccination is the safest, most reliable way to protect our servicemembers from a potential threat that is 99 percent lethal to unprotected, untreated individuals. Anthrax remains the top biological warfare threat to U.S. troops, and the vaccine is our safest, most effective weapon to protect our people against that threat," Cohen said.

When FDA-released vaccine is again available, the full scope of the program will be resumed.

Precise plans for resuming vaccinations will be based on the recommendation of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices and consultation with the FDA.

"Additionally, we need to assure a sufficient, long-term supply of vaccine," said the secretary. "Protecting our servicemembers is far too important for us to rely on a single source. We are immediately and aggressively seeking a second U.S. source of anthrax vaccine.

"Additionally, we need to assure a sufficient, long-term supply of vaccine. Protecting our servicemembers is far too important for us to rely on a single source."

- William Cohen
Secretary of Defense

"By having a second source, we can have greater confidence and comfort that a sufficient supply of safe and effective vaccine will be available to protect our servicemembers against anthrax," said Cohen.

More than 455,000 service members have started their vaccinations and more than 1.8 million vaccinations have been given. To be fully protected, servicemembers are vaccinated using the FDA-approved protocol of six immunizations over an 18-month period, plus annual boosters. (AFP)

Hurricane preparations

The Air Force Personnel Center has established a 1-800 number within the personnel readiness center to field questions and provide assistance if Air Force bases are affected by natural disasters.

The AFPC/PRC creates database files for all personnel assigned to an installation threatened by natural disaster. The files are used to aid in the accountability of AF personnel. When evacuated personnel should contact the AFPC/PRC for information as soon as they've established an evacuation location and provide the contact information above. The number to call is 1-800-435-9941.
